

Results of the One-Year-Out Survey of the Connecticut College Class of 2013

Office of Institutional Research
March 2015

Each summer, the Office of Career-Enhancing Life Skills (CELS) and the Office of Institutional Research collaborate on an online “one-year-out” survey of graduates from the previous graduating class to try to determine their current activities, particularly with regard to employment and enrollment in graduate school or non-degree-seeking coursework. The survey of members of the Class of 2013 was sent to 440 individuals, 131 of whom responded (29.8%).

Because of the importance of this information and the reality that alumni surveys typically achieve low response rates, we took additional steps to learn more about Class of 2013 graduates. First, we queried the National Student Clearinghouse database to learn about graduate school enrollments of the nonrespondents. A total of 15 graduates who had not responded to the survey were found to be enrolled in educational institutions as of fall 2014. We also searched for survey nonrespondents on social media websites (most notably, LinkedIn) to try to learn about their education and/or employment activities since graduating. Overall, we located social media profiles that contained usable information on current activities for 220 of the 309 survey nonrespondents. Finally, we asked the CELS office staff to provide any information they had on students we couldn't locate. Through this method, we aimed to produce a snapshot of the graduating class at one moment in time that is as complete and accurate as possible, recognizing that some of the information will become outdated quickly due to the fluidity of young adults' lives in the initial years after college.

Combining the data from all sources, we documented the activities of 376 of the 440 members of the Class of 2013, or just over 85%. This far exceeds what one would hope to achieve from an alumni survey alone, and it exceeds the response rates on which many colleges' published alumni outcomes data are based. Summarizing the results is tricky because some students are both employed and enrolled in school (at least part time), so one method of reporting graduates' activities would be to report each activity and produce, through double counting, total percentages of students employed and enrolled in school that exceed 100%. To avoid this confusion, each graduate is reported as being engaged in a single primary activity, although it should be remembered that this somewhat oversimplifies our graduates' actual activities – which may include a variety of part-time, freelance, or volunteer activity in addition to their primary activity.

Overall, about 73% of the Class of 2013 graduates for whom we found outcomes data were employed, and about 21.5% were enrolled in college or university courses at least part time – a total of 94.4% of the class. Another 2.4% were working in public service programs such as AmeriCorps VISTA. Together, then, of the graduates for whom we could find information, about 96.8% were employed, in graduate school, completing a fellowship, or doing public service that paid a stipend.

By fall 2014, three Class of 2013 graduates had already earned master’s degrees – two in education (MA’s from Teachers College/Columbia University and from Brandeis University) and one in optical science and engineering (an MS from the University of Rochester). One additional student had earned a certificate from Goucher College’s Post-Baccalaureate Pre-Medical Program.

Graduates in the “Other” category were typically engaged in mixtures of part-time employment or coursework, volunteering, traveling, job search, or applying to graduate school.

For those indicating that they were employed, the one-year-out survey asked respondents a series of questions about their preparation for the position. This question was added to the survey this year to learn more about our graduates’ “first destinations” following graduation and how graduates view these positions. (Unfortunately, we have responses from only 81 graduates because the questions were asked only of those reporting employment, and we did not query students we located via social media.)

Respondents were first asked “Do you/did you think of this job as a career, a stepping stone to a career, or just a job to get you by?” The open-ended responses are difficult to summarize concisely since some students indicated more than one response (e.g., “Career/Stepping Stone to a Career”). The approximate breakdown of responses was 44% indicating that their position was likely to be a career, 54% indicating that it was a stepping stone, and 1% indicating that it was “a one-year side adventure.” (It should be noted that this “side adventure” was a Fulbright fellowship teaching English in Malaysia.)

The survey next asked “Is this/was this job related to your major(s) at Connecticut College?” Approximately 50% of respondents said that the position was related to their major(s), 17% said that it was somewhat related, and 17% said that it was unrelated. (The remaining 16% gave ambiguous answers.)

Finally, the survey asked “Do you/did you have more qualifications than the job requires, the right amount of qualifications, or only some of the qualifications the job requires?” About 16% of respondents said that they had more skills than were required for the position, about 70% said their skill level was about right, 4% said they were underqualified for their positions, and 10% gave some other response (e.g., “tough to say”) or gave no response.

These questions are important ones for interpreting the success of a career program at a liberal arts college, particularly in light of frequent media portrayals that imply that a graduate’s first job following college ought to be related to his/her major or be a well-paying career-like position. These portrayals do not match the actual experiences of many of our graduates, and so it is important to be able to offer a more realistic counter-portrayal of what successful liberal arts graduates do in today's world.

The appendices that follow show the employment and graduate school outcomes of members of the Class of 2013 alphabetically by employer (Appendix 1) and graduate school (Appendix 2), and by major for those who are employed (Appendix 3) and in graduate school (Appendix 4). Students with more than one major are listed under each of the majors with which they graduated.
